Respecting 'superheroes'

Teenager Curtis Evans was looking for an Eagle Scout project. Listening to Patrick Mahoney, a military re-enactor from one town over, talk about long-forgotten veterans buried in neglected gravesites in the Eureka cemetery piqued Curtis' interest. With research from a book about local war dead by historian Joann Morris and backed with financial support from Elks "Tintic" Lodge 0711, Curtis felt he could finally tackle his proposed project of refurbishing six veteran gravesites.

First, Curtis had to find all six graves, identify the occupants, and verify all were indeed Civil War veterans. With help from Fort Douglas Military Museum, Curtis had confirmation within a week—he was taking care of five Union soldiers: Samuel H. Nelson, George T. Bridges, John A. Davidson, Alexander Tony West, John T. Sullivan; and one Confederate: James Curtis Kirkendall. Curtis found all six had no known living relatives close by.

A survey of the sites showed four had headstones, two did not, and all were in disrepair. With help from his grandpa, they fortified the ground, stabilized headstones, put in curbing and gravel. Then added small American flags and star-shaped markers identifying on which side the veterans fought. "Grandpa said to honor all of them equally since they fought for their beliefs," Curtis added. The whole process has taken about 18 months.

Curtis says it's hard to relate to the "old guys" because life now is so different from then. However, hard work, patience, love of country are values you can appreciate anytime. "They deserve all the honor and credit we can give them. They put their lives on the line, just like a superhero." —MICHELLE BRIDGES FOR VALOR
